

NSW Branch

The first professional association for neonatal nurses in Australia was established in NSW in 1987 (ANN), which led to the formation of ANNA (Australian Neonatal Nurses Associations) in 1992 and later in 2012, state associations amalgamated to form the Australian College of Neonatal Nurses

Our Aim

Providing education, professional support, and networking for neonatal nurses and midwives in regional and metropolitan areas is a central activity. Country seminars are rotated between the north, south, and western regions of NSW.

Partnerships

The Torie Finnane Foundation has partnered with the NSW Branch to support the country educational events, to make education more accessible for rural nurses and midwives working in neonatal care. Taking advantage of changes in technology, virtual education events and committee meetings can now also be held, making it easier to build connections for all NSW neonatal nurses and midwives.

What we offer

- ✓ Local targeted event for members
- ✓ Committee experience
- ✓ Opportunities to connect and network with like-minded members
- ✓ Access to the Jessie Everson-Checkley Education Grant (up to $2000 per applicant)
