

Neonatal Nurse Practitioner

SPECIAL INTEREST GROUP

What is a Neonatal Nurse Practitioner (NNP)?

A nurse practitioner is an advanced practice nurse endorsed by the governing body (Nursing and Midwifery Board of Australia: NMBA) to practise under the legislatively protected title 'nurse practitioner'.¹

The role of the NNP:

Nurse practitioners undertake formal learning (including a work-based component) at Masters level to achieve endorsement. This formal learning builds on the advanced registered nurse practice scope. Neonatal NPs apply expert knowledge and an expanded scope of practice to assess, investigate, diagnose, and treat neonatal conditions. Care is provided in partnership with the multi-disciplinary team and the NNP ensures appropriate referral to other health care professionals.

NNPs in Australia are growing in number, working across the tertiary, regional and retrieval sectors in a variety of successful models. They play an integral role in the provision of safe, effective, and quality care for neonates and their families.

The ACNN NNP SIG aims to:

- Provide a forum for information, education, support, advice and mentoring specifically for NNPs and those working towards the role within Australia.
- Support candidates through forums and mentoring when requested.
- Seek opportunities to liaise with and provide feedback to providers of nurse practitioner degree programs with the aim of supporting the specialised educational and clinical learning requirements of neonatal nurse practitioners.
- Develop professional links and reduce the isolation associated that can occur within a specialty role.
- Share resources and knowledge to facilitate implementation of evidence into practice for the enhancement of neonatal care.

Statement of Purpose

To provide a collaborative network for current and future neonatal nurse practitioners within the Australian context.

Priorities for the SIG are to support advanced neonatal clinical education, provide guidance for neonatal nursing clinicians interested in pursuing the NNP career pathway, and link NNPs and candidates together in a mentorship framework.

Membership

Membership is open to any nurse or midwife who is a current financial member of ACNN. Members may include those interested in, or currently undertaking a Master of Nursing (Nurse Practitioner) or is endorsed / seeking endorsement as an NNP.

How to become an NNP?

The Nurse Practitioner Standards of Practice

Capability in education, research and leadership are integral to the clinical practice of the nurse practitioner. NP standards of practice form the core of the nurse practitioner role. Professional development within these practice areas is a critical component of the nurse practitioner journey. Mentorship from an endorsed NNP is of great assistance to those interested in pursuing this pathway. For this reason, linking aspiring NNP candidates with a mentor is a key goal of the NNP SIG.

Current requirements for Endorsement

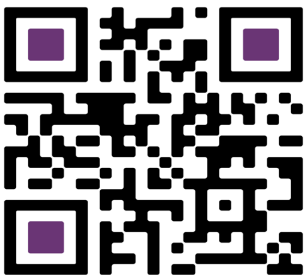

On successful completion of the Master's program, the applicant may seek endorsement by the NMBA, through the Australian Health Practitioner Regulation Agency. More information is available on the Nursing and Midwifery Board Australia website
